Hey Beck, just to clarify one thing, using SpeedTree in this way is actually a breach of our EULA agreement for SpeedTree Cinema and SpeedTree Games. I don't want you to get too far down this road or purchase any Trees before finding that out!

That being said there are some great free alternatives to SpeedTree that might work for you if you're just looking to make some new trees for a mod!

i have not purchased any trees from the library or any where else. These trees were created by EA for the sims 3 game. We ask custom content creators have been allowed by EA to convert any item from any of the sims games into another sim game. There are millions of people who have content from another game. These items are NOT speedtree items...they were made using speedtree.

what we have to do to convert a sims 3 item into sims 4 is make sure we have the mesh in the .obj format. Then we go into blender or milkshape or any software that accepts .obj format for meshing. We then take the ts4 item into blender and then import the .obj item then we make the necessary adjustments to the sims 3 item that matches the information on the sims 4 item. then we use the software that allows us to conver whether it TSRW or S4S. then we are able to put the item into the game and other simmers are able to download the item and put into their game for use. Again, EA created these plants and trees and they did not get them from the speedtree library or store.

I totally understand, unfortunately, EA can't give permission to creators to modify or distribute the assets as part of their license agreement with us. SpeedTree is different than tools like maya, max, or blender in that it's a middleware tool. There is proprietary data stored inside of each .spt and .spm file, which is why modifying them is such a sticky issue, even if it's for non-commercial use.
